Everett to Delta Transmission Line Project Update

The PUD is continuing to work behind the scenes on the Everett-Delta 115-kV Transmission Project, a new approximately 3.5-mile line that will connect the Everett Substation with the Delta Switching Station in north Everett. The project will help support growing electrical demand in the area, strengthen reliability and help prevent low-voltage conditions if local power is interrupted. We wanted to provide you with an update on some important aspects of this project.

Your votes have been tallied and...

steel blue is our winner! Steel Blue received more votes than the other two colors combined (237 vs. 187), giving it a clear majority. Thank you to everyone who took the time to vote.

PUD engineers will now begin the process of ordering these poles for next year's installation. It typically takes about 8 to 9 months from when transmission poles are ordered to when they are ready to be delivered.

Update on Wrapping the Poles

The PUD will be sending out a call for local artists to vinyl wrap poles along the Everett to Delta line after the poles have been installed next year. We plan to share the call for artists with the community in January 2027.

The PUD is still deciding how many poles will be wrapped and the exact location of those poles.

Construction Update

The PUD is currently in the process of acquiring the necessary easements for the transmission line. Property owners will be contacted via phone, email and by mail. If you have any questions about this process, or if you have questions about how construction might impact your business, please click on the box below to submit questions and comments and a project representative will connect with you.

As the project advances, PUD will continue sharing updates with customers and community members about upcoming milestones and opportunities to provide input.
